

ladder, Mrs. Jones advanced from a Secretary position to become the Chief of Protocol for the U.S. Army Military District of Washington. Over the years, she gained a reputation among her peers and Army leadership as the resident expert in military protocol and etiquette.

Mrs. Jones was directly responsible for the success of countless ceremonial events such as the Army's notable Twilight Tattoo, Spirit of America, holiday concerts, numerous retirements and in a special tribute to honor America's fallen heroes of September 11. Many of these events gave great solace to our national audience. She was the ever present figure behind the scenes ensuring that all went well. Her involvement and unique sense of what the United States Army meant to her countrymen allowed Mrs. Jones to chart these events so that everyone in attendance was enthused with a sense of pride in our senior service.

I mention her today because I believe it is important to recognize the type of steadfast trooper we have in Mrs. Jones; she was always there, working the late hours before the event and hustling during the event. She was the person concerned about the smallest detail so that the pride of the Army would be at the maximum level. Mrs. Jones was likely so caught up in these events to ensure success that she had little time to contemplate the scale and dignity of the grand ceremonies she brought about. I was pleased to note that the Army recognized that time had come to give Mrs. Jones her own ceremony. On July 16 of this year, Mrs. Jones was awarded the Superior Civilian Service Award by Major General Jackman, Commanding General, U.S. Army Military District of Washington, for her exceptional contributions to the Directorate of Ceremonies and Special Events. This medal reflects her superb service and the gratitude of a long gray line of Army Protocol Specialists whose lives and careers she has touched, and many of whom have become successful in their own right as a result of carrying with them the lessons learned under Mrs. Jones.

I am please to report that her future plans include spending quality time with her grandchildren and family. These personal ventures have been long put aside for the benefit of our Army, and for the record, let it be noted that Mrs. Jones's countrymen extend their gratitude for her loyalty and dedicated service to her country. ●
